Interested students will be eligible to apply for registration for "Moot Court-External Competitions" in the spring semester (even though some preliminary work on the brief will be done during the fall semester). To receive credit each team must have a faculty advisor, and each team member must be allowed by the advisor to enroll. Eligibility to participate and receive credit therefore is limited and will be based on application and demonstration of ability.

Those selected to participate in a competition will be required to share in the drafting of a brief based on a problem prepared by the competition's sponsor. Generally, the faculty advisor is precluded from supervising the brief prior to submission to the competition, and can only provide general guidance on substantive law and briefing techniques. Therefore, student work on the brief is independent. In addition to the brief, students must participate in four or more practice arguments, as directed by the advisor. These practice rounds are typically critiqued by a faculty advisor and/or volunteers from the local legal community. The team must then participate in the competition according to the rules of the competition. Typically this requires arguing no less than twice in preliminary rounds.

Those accepted for a competition in the fall will register for external competitions in the spring semester. The School generally underwrites all or most of the travel expenses of students selected to participate in external competitions for which credit is granted. (Students are free to participate in other external competitions, but such participation is considered an extra-curricular activity for which no credit can be earned and with no expectation that the school can reimburse travel or incidental expenses).

All students participating in an external moot court competition are required to meet with the Senior Assistant Dean for Student Services and to provide the dean with the requested releases and information.
